What to Expect From the Insurance Adjuster After a Truck Accident

After a tractor-trailer crash, the injured person usually deals with an insurance company long before any courtroom. Trucking companies and their insurers often move quickly, and their early steps can shape the claim. Knowing these practices is one reason people consult an 18-wheeler accident lawyer before giving statements or signing documents.

Federal insurance minimums for trucking companies

Minimum levels of financial responsibility are atlanta truck accident lawyer set by the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA) in 49 CFR Part 387. For-hire trucking companies operating vehicles with a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 pounds or more must carry at least $750,000 in public liability coverage when they haul nonhazardous property in interstate commerce. Certain hazardous materials require $1,000,000 or $5,000,000 depending on the material. These are floors, not caps, and some trucking companies carry more coverage through excess or umbrella policies. An MCS-90 endorsement may also apply to certain claims, and a truck accident attorney will usually request every policy that could apply.

The company's first moves

Many trucking companies and their insurers are prepared to send investigators, adjusters or defense counsel to a serious crash quickly. They may photograph the scene, download the engine control module (ECM), interview witnesses and document the damage. That work is lawful, but the information they collect goes to the trucking company first. A truck accident lawyer may send a preservation letter requesting that the company keep the truck, the ECM and ELD data, camera footage and the driver's records.

What to expect from the insurance adjuster

An insurance adjuster may call soon after the crash and ask for a recorded statement. In many cases there is no obligation to give one to the other side's insurer, though a person's own policy may require cooperation with that insurer. Statements atlantatruckaccidentlawyers.wiki given while hurting or medicated can be used later to dispute the claim. Adjusters may also request broad medical authorizations that open records unrelated to the crash.

Early settlement offers are another common practice. An offer may arrive before the full extent of an injury is known, and accepting it usually means signing a release that ends the claim. Insurers often argue comparative negligence, pointing to the injured driver's speed or lane position to lower the payment. Some also dispute injuries by pointing to preexisting conditions or gaps in treatment.

Surveillance and social media

Insurers sometimes review public social media posts after a crash, searching for photos or comments that appear to conflict with a claimed injury. In some claims they also hire investigators to film the injured person in public places. One image can be taken out of context, and a brief clip seldom shows what came before or after it. Many people limit what they post while a claim is open, and they keep their own notes on symptoms, missed work and medical visits.

What goes into the value of a truck claim

Damages in a truck injury claim can include medical expenses, lost wages, reduced earning capacity, property damage, and pain and suffering. In a wrongful death case, the available claims and who may bring them depend on state law. A tractor-trailer accident lawyer usually gathers medical records and bills along with wage documents before sending a demand. Health insurers, Medicare or Medicaid may have liens or reimbursement rights that have to be resolved from a settlement.

Fees and expectations

Many truck accident lawyers work on a contingency fee, meaning the fee is a percentage of any recovery and is spelled out in a written agreement. No lawyer or article can promise a particular result, and this page is general information, not legal advice.
