

Alan Senejani is the co-founder and head luthier of LVL Music Academy, and his contribution to the <https://www.instapaper.com/read/2023052891> violin shop and workshop is what makes LVL genuinely unique among Singapore's music establishments. A violin maker and restorer by vocation, a mechanical engineer by training, and a digital marketer by practice, Alan brings an unusually broad and deep skill set to everything he does at LVL. As a luthier, Alan approaches every instrument as a work of art and a precision tool simultaneously. Whether he is making a fine adjustment to the soundpost position of a student violin or undertaking a complex restoration of a century-old instrument, he brings the same meticulous attention to detail and commitment to the best possible outcome. His engineering background gives him analytical tools that purely craft-trained luthiers may lack, allowing him to understand the acoustics of an instrument at a structural level. Customers who have visited Alan's workshop consistently describe the experience as educational. He explains clearly what he is doing and why, shares his assessment of the instrument's strengths and areas for improvement, and provides honest advice about what repairs are and are not worth undertaking at different price points.
