

To send peonies to your daughter abroad, arrange delivery through a florist in her country and provide an address where she can receive them. Check that peonies are available locally, agree on a delivery date, and add a note that makes the flowers feel personal.

Find peonies near her

Start by looking for a florist that delivers to your daughter's city or town. Ordering flowers already in her country can be simpler than shipping a bouquet across a border, where fresh flowers may be subject to import rules or inspection.

Peonies have a limited season, and the timing depends on the location and the flowers available to the florist. Ask before placing an order if the bouquet will contain peonies, how many stems it will include, and what the florist will do if they become unavailable.

If her favorite color matters, mention it. Peonies come in shades including white, pink, and red, though a particular shade may not be available on the day you need it. You can also ask the florist to suggest an alternative flower if peonies are out of season. This gives you a chance to approve the change rather than leave it to chance.

Make delivery easy for her

Choose an address where someone can receive the flowers. Her home may be best if she is likely to be there, while her workplace may be convenient if it accepts personal deliveries. If you are unsure, it is fine to ask her. The bouquet can still be a lovely surprise even if the delivery is not.

Before you order, gather the details the florist needs:

- Her full name and a complete local address, including any apartment or office number.
- A phone number the delivery person can use if there is a problem.
- The date you would like the flowers to arrive and any useful delivery instructions.
- Your preference for a substitute if peonies are unavailable.

Check the spelling and address carefully, especially if you are entering them in an unfamiliar format. Ask the florist what happens if your daughter is out when the flowers arrive. You may prefer to choose a day when she can bring them inside promptly.

A short note can bridge the distance without needing to say everything. You might write, “Thinking of you and hoping these brighten your room,” or simply tell her what you miss about having her nearby. Use your own words, even if the message is only a line.

Questions you may have

Can I send peonies if I do not know her address?

You will usually need a delivery address to complete the order. Ask her directly, or check with someone she trusts who can confirm the details. Avoid guessing, since a wrong address could delay the flowers.

What if the peonies arrive as tight buds?

Peonies are often delivered in bud and can open after arrival. Your daughter can place them in a clean vase with fresh water and follow any care instructions from the florist.

Also helpful: Vienna art history and flowers