Living a long way from Corby does not have to mean going without a proper phone screen repair, because Free Fusion takes in devices by post from customers all over the UK. Mail-in repairs travel by Royal Mail and DPD, and the work is carried out by the same independent device specialists who run the walk-in counter on the High Street. It is a sensible route if you are busy, if you cannot get to a shop in your working week, or if you simply prefer to deal with the repair from home.

Preparation makes a big difference. Back up the phone first if it still lets you, remove the case and any screen protector, and take out your SIM card. Know your passcode and your Apple ID or Google account details, because security locks can get in the way of testing a device once it has been repaired. If the glass is cracked, a layer of clear tape across the front helps keep splinters from working loose in transit, then wrap the phone in bubble wrap or similar padding and use a sturdy box rather than a thin envelope.

Include a note with your name, return address, phone number and a short description of the fault, including anything unusual such as ghost touches or a recent drop in water. Choose a tracked service from Royal Mail or DPD and consider what compensation cover they offer for the value of your device. Customers in Leicestershire, Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, the West Midlands and London use this service, but it works just as well from anywhere else in the country. Keep any receipt or tracking number somewhere safe until the phone is back in your hands, so that you can follow its journey in both directions.

Once a package arrives, postal tablets and other mailed devices are typically tested and dispatched the same day, and the repair is backed by a warranty like any other we carry out. For a rough idea of cost, iPhone screens start from £24.99 and iPad screens from £39.99, so a postal repair is often far cheaper than replacing the device. If your fault turns out to be something other than the screen, such as a worn battery or a damaged charging port, we can talk phone screen repair it through with you.

To ask about sending your phone, tablet or laptop, call Free Fusion on 01536 260 558 and we will explain the steps for your particular device. If you would rather hand it over in person, you are always welcome at 62a High St, Corby.
